

INTRODUCTION

Today more than ever, the quality of legal services in the legal profession is an important topic that concerns all legal professionals worldwide in a variety of fields.

The quality of legal services and the role of Bar Associations in each country is not uniform. But it is commonly accepted that it is essential that Bars and Law Societies pursue their missions with complete independence and that they continue to guarantee a high standard of legal services. They are key actors in ensuring the quality of the services provided by their members as well as ensuring that all citizens have access to legal services.

Certainly, the quality of legal services is not limited to acquiring and utilising knowledge, skills, know-how or respect for procedures and deadlines, but also includes professional integrity, respect for professional ethics and providing a good service more generally.
